

Commissioner Henney:

I must add that many people trust the decisions your organization makes and believe in what you approve or don't approve. You have a serious moral obligation to work with the best interest of the public's health in mind. You are probably aware that the reputation of the FDA is tarnished. Many friends, acquaintances and myself do not believe you act in the general population's interest, just the interest of your pocket books. I do not trust many things you have approved. I believe your studies are biased and I am begging that you carefully assess the impact of these genetically modified products. The health of the citizens of the US is declining. Please remember the innocent lives that trust you. The health of people is much more important than money.

Sincerely,

Jeanette Karren
